ED BY THE SUPREME COURT,
et al. vs. Davis et al., From Revered and Remanded
For a New Trial.

TEXAS, March 2.—Following are the opinions delivered by the court yesterday:
AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, G. A. STAGGS ET AL; certiorari denied in a case from Tarrant Co., Second district.
The question certified and the referred to we understand that the was upon appellant's track with approaching from behind him under circumstances as made him liable with contributory negligence in leaving the approaching train and hitting the track. The persons who sawing the track saw the deceased at the time he was between a and a half miles in front of the place which the employee of appellant used ordinary care to distance himself so as to prevent injury to him, and in his opinion, if less than the injury charged the jury, in effect, to the other and children of deceased entitled to recover under the above facts.

The trial court committed error in giving the charge as follows:

BONNETTE.—At her home, in Pollock, La., on January 20, 1897, Mrs. Irene L. Bonnette (nee Thrasher), wife of Dr. J. L. Bonnette, aged 21 years, 10 months and 21 days.

It is with more than ordinary sorrow that the writer chronicles the death of Mrs. Bonnette, a woman whose existence, though it was good, true and beautiful in womanhood, death was no less a calamity to the community, the extent of which is only realized when it can not be repaired by human agency.

To those who were blest by her love, it was a happiness. To the husband and mother, about whose hearts beat stones, the ashes of buried hope are strewed, and whose eyes are wet with tears, the loss is irreparable. The consciousness that a happier existence lies, inasmuch as she was a Christian.

The wealth of a mother's love was lavished upon the darling babe, who can never mean in their power, nor safety, to prevent the insurance company would be liable, leaving the contributory negligence of the deceased.

A synopsis of the opinion of the court, delivered yesterday in

CONVERSE ET AL (EXECUTORS) WILLIAM DAVIS ET AL, from court, Fourth district.

Court of T. W. Pierce instituted in the district court of Bexar county, William Davis and his children, in cause: (1) that on February 1, 1897, William Davis executed a note conveying certain property in Antonio to H. B. Andrews, in payment of the payment of certain debts due Davis in favor of Pierce; and (2) that he was entitled to a specific performance of a specified sum of money to pay off a note which was authorized under this trust deed to appoint a trustee in certain contingencies, as he was empowered to do after the maturity of the notes and the death of Pierce.

Andrews was to execute the trust by making a property when defendants in the day set for the sale, secured a court of equity to enjoin his jeopardizing, by the act which brought about his death, the notes of the notes and that this wrong was committed constantly in force since were barred and the note had died. The petition was granted by the court of a writ to execute the trust.

In error, by special exception, it was argued that a court of equity of the debt being while from executing its aid in the cause of the trust.
